THE HOLISTIC CARE

EVERY year around 10 million individuals in the world suffer from work-related stress, depression and/or anxiety resulting in:

- Reduced work performance
- Illness
- Poor time keeping
- General absenteeism
- Increased staff turnover

Costing industry millions of revenue, time & the expense incurred on resultant health care issues.

These all tend to rise in accordance with job pressures, all of which have a devastating effect on profit margins, not to mention morale. If stress remains undetected or is simply ignored, the problem will not go away, it will simply be exacerbated: sturdier and efficient members of staff will eventually suffer too, as they become burdened with the work of colleagues who are less able to cope.
In fact, it’s hard to think of any disease in which stress cannot play an aggravating role or any part of the body that is not affected.

The Physical Signs of Stress
Increased heart rate, stomach & digestive disturbances, diarrhea, sweating, heart attack, ulcers, head aches, chest pains, insomnia, accident prone, alcoholism, high BP.

The Mental Signs of Stress
Tension, tightness, resistance, friction, anger, guilt, critical, anxiety, evasion, reactive, discontentment, worry, impatience, apprehension
When dealt with in the right way, conflict can actually lead to positive outcomes such as more effective teamwork and greater innovation. This clearly indicates that there is a need for complementary therapies within the workplace.

Today mainstream businesses become more aware of the physical health and psychological wellness benefits of meditation and other holistic and spiritual disciplines, a subtle yet powerful change in the collective corporate consciousness is taking place.

It has become increasingly common for companies to introduce their staff to holistic practices that enhance their health and wellbeing so as to lower stress levels in the workplace and to encourage maximum productivity and ingenuity.
